

Michael Kei Stewart

Revisions

1. Today I will not require the spoons to match.
2. It is completely different to be in the bath,
I suddenly see, as opposed to giving it.
3. The mango's tang revives sweet memories of jacaranda and unusual hotels.
4. As I look at your questioning eyes tonight,
I feel the wrench within that says the time may finally have arrived when I should own and guide you.

Is it wise to trust these reawakenings or is it wine? Can I make these choices mine?
Be calm; I will let the time decide and if it will, the night can hide the sorcery that slides revisions in,
and in the morning I will feel,
or not, them living in my skin.

Michael Kei Stewart was born in West Africa and has lived in various parts of the United States and in East Africa. He trained as a painter before becoming involved in the computer industry, in which he currently works as a software developer while blogging poetry at <http://www.mksanythingblog.blogspot.com/>.