

Wendy Freborg

JOURNEY

Side by side, we drive a dark new road.
The back seat awaits the passenger
Who rides inside me now.
Our headlights, like the books we read,
Cut into the darkness;
We glimpse what lies ahead
As we hurtle towards a strange new destination.

Wendy Freborg is a former editor and retired social worker living in Sonoma County, California. She has one husband and one son, enough friends, too many doctors and a volunteer job that requires petting puppies. Her first nationally published work appeared in 1964. More recent credits include Big River Poetry Review, Vox Poetica, Our Day's Encounter, and Brevity.
