

Marty Thibodaux

April's Leaving

As April's kiss gives way to the touch of May's embrace, I shutter to accept April's farewell, for her spring was my heart's covenant with nature's rebirth, her beauty was all around, from the daisies in meadows, vast and magical, white and yellow, swaying in the springtime breeze.
To the rivers with shores of lush green bushes, tree alive with songbirds giving warmth and pleasure to my soul.
A man's heart fills with that which makes love go round within him, sweeter than the sweetest of roses.

So, May, I shall enjoy your visit, until the months of summer, come way too soon.
Perhaps your visit will not be as short as that of April, although at your leaving,
so then also,
shall I weep.

Marty Thibodaux lives in Lockport, Louisiana . He has been writing since his teenage years. He has lived in south Louisiana for all of his life. Marty is married to Dawn Thibodaux. He has 2 children, 2 step sons, 3 grandchildren. His poetry tends to lean more toward nature, with an occasional delve into other inspirations.